

Associate Professor Pham Hong Van, MD, PhD

Deputy Director – National Hospital of Acupuncture

Professional Biography

Associate Professor Pham Hong Van is an experienced clinician, researcher, and healthcare administrator in the field of acupuncture and traditional medicine. With more than three decades of professional experience, professional work focuses on the clinical application of acupuncture therapy, stroke rehabilitation, and the integration of traditional medicine with modern rehabilitation techniques.

Academic training includes a Doctor of Philosophy (PhD) in Traditional Medicine from Hanoi Medical University in 2015, a Master’s degree in Acupuncture in 2003, and a Doctor of Medicine (MD) degree in 1993. Professional career has been closely associated with the National Hospital of Acupuncture, with leadership roles in hospital planning, quality management, and healthcare administration.

Since February 2020, responsibilities have included serving as Deputy Director of the National Hospital of Acupuncture, contributing to hospital management, scientific research development, and the advancement of acupuncture-based rehabilitation therapies in Vietnam.

Academic and Leadership Positions

- Deputy Director, National Hospital of Acupuncture
- Former Head, General Planning Department – National Hospital of Acupuncture
- Former Head, Quality Management Department – National Hospital of Acupuncture
- Former Deputy Head, General Planning Department – National Hospital of Acupuncture

Clinical and Research Expertise

- Acupuncture therapy
- Stroke rehabilitation
- Treatment of neurological disorders

- Pain management and musculoskeletal diseases
- Integration of traditional medicine with rehabilitation medicine

International Academic Activities

Participation in academic and scientific activities related to acupuncture and rehabilitation medicine, including scientific publications, clinical research projects, and collaboration in professional training and hospital-based research programs in traditional medicine.

Areas of Academic Interest

- Acupuncture therapy in neurological rehabilitation
- Stroke rehabilitation and functional recovery
- Integration of acupuncture with rehabilitation medicine
- Clinical research in acupuncture and traditional medicine
- Development of acupuncture-based therapeutic approaches

International Contributions

Scientific research and professional activities contribute to the advancement of acupuncture therapy and rehabilitation medicine in Vietnam. Contributions include conducting clinical research, developing therapeutic approaches combining acupuncture with rehabilitation techniques, and supporting professional training in traditional medicine and acupuncture.

Keynote Profile

Associate Professor Pham Hong Van is recognized for extensive clinical experience and research in acupuncture therapy and rehabilitation medicine. Keynote presentations focus on stroke rehabilitation, acupuncture treatment for neurological and musculoskeletal disorders, and the integration of traditional medicine with modern rehabilitation techniques.