

Associate Professor Pham Quoc Binh, MD, PhD

Chairman of the University Council

Vietnam University of Traditional Medicine

Professional Biography

Associate Professor Pham Quoc Binh is a senior medical educator and healthcare administrator specializing in Traditional Medicine. With extensive experience in medical education and university governance, he has played an important role in advancing the development of traditional medicine training in Vietnam.

Throughout his career at the Vietnam University of Traditional Medicine, he has contributed significantly to improving the quality of education, promoting competency-based medical training, and strengthening collaboration between universities, hospitals, and research institutions.

He currently serves as Chairman of the University Council and Secretary of the Party Committee of the Vietnam University of Traditional Medicine, where he is responsible for guiding institutional development strategies and promoting academic excellence in traditional medicine education.

Academic and Leadership Positions

- Chairman of the University Council – Vietnam University of Traditional Medicine
- Secretary of the Party Committee – Vietnam University of Traditional Medicine
- Vice Chairman – Institutional Professorship Council, Vietnam University of Traditional Medicine

Clinical and Academic Expertise

- Traditional medicine education
- Healthcare management in traditional medicine
- Development of traditional medicine training programs
- Integration of traditional medicine into modern healthcare systems

International Academic Activities

Participation in academic and professional activities related to traditional medicine education and healthcare management. These activities include academic exchanges, collaboration with medical institutions, and contributions to educational development in traditional medicine.

Areas of Academic Interest

- Development of traditional medicine medical education
- Competency-based training for traditional medicine physicians
- Educational quality assurance in medical universities
- Integration of traditional medicine with modern medical education

Professional and Social Contributions

During the COVID-19 pandemic, Associate Professor Pham Quoc Binh organized and led teams of faculty members and students from the Vietnam University of Traditional Medicine to participate in national pandemic response activities in several localities.

He has also been actively involved in professional initiatives supporting the advancement of traditional medicine education and healthcare development in Vietnam.

Keynote Profile

Associate Professor Pham Quoc Binh is recognized as a leading academic administrator in traditional medicine education in Vietnam. His keynote presentations focus on the development of traditional medicine education, healthcare management in traditional medicine institutions, and strategies for integrating traditional medicine training within modern medical education systems.